

Inside Heath Ledger's "Tree House"

Thu., Sep. 22, 2011 2:55 PM PDT by NATALIE FINN

Like Send 15 people like this. Be the first of your friends.

Courtesy of Realtor.com, ZumaPress

Looking at his former home in the Hollywood Hills, it's apparent that Heath Ledger liked his privacy.

A secluded, cozy-by-L.A.-standards house once owned by the late actor is on the market for $2.995 million, the second time it's been for sale since his death in January 2008. The property was snatched up that year by a private buyer.

But there's certainly nothing wrong with the bachelor pad on paper.

MORE: Michelle Williams Opens Up on Grieving Heath Ledger, Being Single and Kissing Privacy Goodbye

Dubbed "the Tree House" for its location in a sycamore grove perched on a hillside, the gated house has two bedrooms and two bathrooms, an office, soaring beamed ceilings, huge windows, concrete slab flooring, a covered porch and lots of room for entertaining outdoors.

If it strikes your fancy, there's also room to put in a pool, per Realtor.com.

Ledger split his time between L.A. and New York, at one point living in Brooklyn with then-partner Michelle Williams and their daughter Matilda.

GALLERY: Heath Ledger: A Life in Pictures